Safely transporting children with hip dysplasia and additional needs

Safe travel in the car for children with hip dysplasia

Children receiving treatment for hip dysplasia often have difficulty travelling safely in standard child restraints. Even with progression to a larger restraint it is often difficult to secure children safely for travelling. Some of the difficulties include:

- Insufficient room for the legs and hips to fit comfortably in the child restraint
- Incorrect fitment of the child harness

Why the harness is so important

To travel safely in a car restraint a child needs to be secured adequately in the safety harness. The harness on a child restraint should fit securely around the child with the shoulder straps over the midpoint of the shoulder, level with or slightly above the shoulder.

The crotch buckle should be positioned to support the pelvis and not beneath the child's bottom. Kidsafe SA can provide advice and assistance to make sure that your baby can travel safely and comfortably in the car. Give us a call to find out how we can help.

Safe travel in the car for children with additional needs

Our child restraint experts provide advice and support to parents and carers of children with additional needs to travel safely in a car.

If your child has a medical condition or disability, Kidsafe SA can help find a solution that works for you and your child using Australian Standards compliant child car restraints, modified compliant restraints, specialty postural devices and various accessories.

Kidsafe SA can also help to fit and adjust your child restraint (fees apply) or recommend other restraints that may be better suited for your child's needs.
